

ELLIOT GORLIN FAYM BIO

“I was hooked on classical music the moment my middle school music teacher played a recording of Haydn’s Trumpet Concerto in my seventh grade music class,” Elliot proudly states. He was so moved by the experience, that he signed up for trumpet lessons and played in the middle school orchestra... alas never once playing that famous concerto.

In high school, Elliot’s artistic talent took over and, inspired by his art teacher and mentor, was encouraged to pursue a career in teaching. He attended the State University of New York, College at Buffalo, majoring in Art Education.

After graduation, there were few teaching positions available. In desperation, he took a job at a local record store on Long Island. That small store was soon purchased by a larger retail chain and he was named Director of Marketing and Advertising a few years later, growing the five store local operation into a 120-store retail music chain in the Northeast.

Since that time, Elliot and Gloria owned their own successful advertising agency in New York and a commercial embroidery business after moving to Las Vegas in 1998. In addition to FAYM, Elliot is also active in the Las Vegas Philharmonic Guild, helping to bring the classical music experience to hundreds of Clark County students. He also serves on the board of the non-profit support organization at the Nevada State Railroad Museum in Boulder City.
